BE MY LOVE

EVERYONE at the Farriday store knew about me and Ron. That's what made it all the harder to bear. You see, Ron and I had become engaged while he was still working at Farriday's. The employees had celebrated with a luncheon party for us, and I was so thrilled! Then, Ron took a job out of town. And all my dreams came crashing down around me so fast, so unexpectedly, that it seemed to me I could hear nothing but the sound of my own heart breaking.

Ron was gay, a little reckless with the flirtatious appeal he used on all the girls, but I kept telling myself that the twinkle in his eyes was all in fun. He was too handsome! Perhaps I didn't want to see the truth.

I was flattered when Ron kept dropping in at the personnel department where I worked as an assistant to the store executives. Jokingly, he said I was always so busy that the only way he could see me was to date me. And I accepted.

He told me that he had been engaged before, but that didn't matter to me. As long as I was Ron's girl I was happy. And I was . . . for a little while.

A few weeks after Ron left Farriday's, he left me, too. One weekend he drove in from his new job in a town some fifty miles away. Instead of taking me on a date, he sat me down and confessed his desire to break our engagement.

"You're a terrific kid, Diane, and I'm sorry to tell you that it's quits," Ron explained, "but it's better now than later."

I stared at him in disbelief. Could these words be coming from the same lips that only a few weeks before had touched mine in a tender kiss?

"You won't have any trouble finding a guy to suit you," Ron smiled. "I'm more the rolling stone than the kind of fellow you deserve."

My hands were like ice, but I managed to pull off Ron's ring . . . a small, sparkling solitaire that had meant so much to me. Its twinkle now had an ironic, mocking light to it. I thrust it into Ron's hand.

"I suppose you've got some other trusting, helpful young girl in mind to wear it this time," I said.

Ron's face reddened.

"I'm sorry, Diane. It's just that working in a different place got me interested in someone else. You're the prettiest girl at Farriday's, and I fell for you. If I hadn't moved to this other job, you'd still be my girl . . ."

"What makes you so sure I'd want to be!" I declared. "I'm not sorry for myself. I feel like a fool for overlooking the fact that you never could stop being a Don Juan. And the one I am sorry for is the 'prettiest' girl you're taking advantage of on your new job. I suppose she's in the personnel department, too, and you'll convince her to talk to the bosses like I talked to Bill Haley to get you the advancement you wanted!"

Ron looked flustered.

What a fool I had been to accept his ring in the first place! I should have suspected him from the time he began to ask me for all the favors I could do for him at Farriday's. But I was too impressed with the envy of the other girls mooning after handsome Ron to face the facts. Maybe I was too impatient to "land" a man, especially after the fruitless time I had spent hoping that Bill Haley would notice me.

When Ron walked out of my life that night, my ego was more sorely wounded than my emotions. I wept . . . but not because Ron meant that much to me. I was more miserable at the prospect of having to face people I worked with at Farriday's.

I took a walk on the avenue and stopped in at a neighborhood store. I walked up to the jewelry counter and carefully inspected the rings displayed there. I looked around me self-consciously. I was relieved to see only strangers in the crowd . . . no one that I knew. I tried on a small, imitation solitaire. At arm's length it deceived me into thinking it was the real thing! I gave the salesgirl a dollar, pulled my gloves on quickly, and hurried home.

In the weeks that followed, I

Albert Dorne – probably the greatest money-maker in the history of commercial art. At the height of his career, he began a full-time search for people who like to draw.

He's Looking for People Who Like to Draw

TODAY HUNDREDS of men and women who never thought they could be artists are working happily at easels and drawing boards, making pictures, and getting well paid for it. They all can thank Albert Dorne, a famous artist who devotes almost his full time to helping other people become artists.

Some of the people Dorne has helped

Herb Smith was a payroll clerk. Soon after he started studying with us, he landed an art job with a large printing firm. This was four years ago; today he's head artist for the same firm.

John Busketta is another. He was a pipefitter's helper in a big gas company. Today he still works for the same company, but as an artist in the advertising department, with a big increase in pay.

Harriet Kuzniewski was bored with an "ordinary" job before she heard of Albert Dorne. Today she does high-style fashion illustration in New York.

With the right training, Wanda Pickulski gave up her typing job to become fashion artist for a local department store.

John Whitaker of Memphis was an airline clerk two years ago. Recently he won a national cartooning contest and was signed to do a newspaper comic strip.

Long before Albert Dorne started looking for people who like to draw, they came to him for advice and help. Since he alone could only help a few of these people he called together America's most successful artists —men like Norman Rockwell, Jon Whitcomb, Stevan Dohanos and Al Parker.

A Plan to Help Others

He said: "All over America, there are people who like to draw, who could be turned into good artists. Why can't we give these people the training they need—including all the trade secrets and know-how we've learned over the years? I'm suggesting a new kind of school—a home-study art school that would give talented people the best professional art training, no matter where they live."

The famous artists agreed. Taking time from their busy careers, they spent several years creating a remarkable series of art lessons covering every aspect of drawing and painting. They illustrated their lessons with over 5,000 "here's-how" illustrations. The lessons start from scratch and cover every skill a top artist needs. Finally, the famous artists developed a wonderful way to give each student personal correction and advice all through his training.

Albert Dorne is not surprised by the success of his students. "The art field is growing. We keep getting calls from all over the country, asking us for practical, well-trained students who can step into full-time or part-time art jobs."

Famous Artists Talent Test

To find others with art talent worth developing, the famous artists created a 12-page talent test. Thousands paid $1 for this test, but now the School offers it free and will grade it free. If you show talent on the test, you will be eligible for training by the School. No obligation. Simply mail coupon. It might be your first step to an exciting, well-paid career in art.
